Terrorism

But as terrorist actions come more to represent the demands of the people, these actions will begin to strike at governments, especially at monuments and institutions that are symbolic....

And such will become very difficult for governments as members of the populace begin to align and affiliate with various organizations or subsidiaries thereof.

Targets in most countries will be ancient landmarks of meaning, especially palaces, cathedrals and shrines. In the United States of America, the lack of such does not mean that there is a lack of symbolic monuments. The White House is not as grand as Versailles or Buckingham, but symbolically is just as much a target. The Washington Monument and the Mount Vernon Estate are also major targets.

In all countries, the meeting places of the ruling classes shall be prime targets.

And while terrorists will go out of their way to spare citizens, they will delight in the opportunity to catch those of the ruling classes

This means that it is of ultimate importance that symbolic chapels, shrines, and cathedrals, and also symbolic government residences and homes be appropriately and properly guarded.

Some of these attacks will be made in broad daylight, as the governments begin to fall apart. The aggressors themselves may lose their lives in the process, but such does not stop the potential damage or danger.

Terrorism in the United States

It is true that in the United States of America, there still exists many and various terrorist organizations, such as the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, the Aryan Nation, and the Black Panthers; and that these organizations still have strength and are still dangerous.

But the greatest threat of terrorism within the nation of America comes not from those established societies that are most renowned, but from other sources, especially from militias that have recently formed and are currently forming in anti-government movements.

We have mentioned the fact that terrorism will, in its organized form, turn to the destruction of symbols; but that destruction of symbols rather than of human life, will result from the dastardly acts of individuals and militias, especially in the United States of America, claiming life at great toll (9/11) to such an extent that terrorism world-wide shall be decried and terrorist organizations punished to the maximum for any infliction of harm to humanity that incurs the taking of life.

Risk to Governments

It will be seen that great risks to major governments, such as France, Great Britain, Germany, Poland, Portugal and Spain, even Italy, shall rise from such organizations as the Hamas and several Islamic groups that form according to radical concepts, as are the newly forming militia's in the United States of America.

Individual Terrorism

One of the greater threats of terrorism at the moment is not terrorism by organized groups, but rather terrorism by individuals who are psychologically unbalanced, deranged, or displaced; youth and young adults who are seeking attention or thrill, and are doing so - not even for revenge - but for the simple sake of "doing".

The continued programming of violence through various means of media and the available access to all matters of information concerning means and modes of destruction, create a situation that is most abhorrent.

It will be noted that many children accessing the Internet can easily receive information on building various types of bombs and weapons - simple to complex - and that such knowledge may be safe in the hands of some.

But where such knowledge exists, it will eventually be used, because all it takes is one individual without the proper discretion and discrimination, or one individual who is in a state of imbalance or psychological disturbance, to do so.

As a result, there is great and grave danger.
