A Message from the American mystic Daniel Clay

Mitakuye Oyasin—All is one!

As we conclude this series, addressing the various issues of crisis that face the world, it is important for you to understand your personal responsibilities and your collective responsibilities. It is because all things are one, all things are interrelated, that it is so important that each of you take responsibility individually. But it is just as important that you collectively, as localities, as towns, as cities, as governments, take responsibility for the world in which you live. The problems that you face such as a warming climate that is exacerbated by your living habits, such as pandemics that can create havoc in your financial institutions and ways of life, are all as a result of the way in which you live and of the fact that you are all interrelated.

Your world is one world. Your environment is one environment. What one individual does in a distant corner of the Earth impacts the lives of other individuals in far lands. It is time that you realize that you are all responsible. You think that you are safe if something is remote. But nothing is remote. You live on an Earth that is like a giant spider web, and when one strand of that web is pulled, the entire web vibrates. This is the world in which you live.

The pandemic that you have just experienced and are currently experiencing is the result of the commonality of the world in which you live. There was a time when such may have been isolated, but such can no longer be. For due to global communication and global travel, something that impacts one individual in the most remote corner of the world will impact all of the world. And as you continue to wreak havoc on your environment and explore into places that should be left virgin, you risk creating more and more of these circumstances. As you interact more and more with nature, you have the viability of releasing more and more natural elements of harm.

Does this mean you should be isolated, that you should not explore, that you should not see or know your world? It does not. But it does mean that you should not be exploiting your world and altering your world for your profit and temporary benefit. You must think in the long term.

Those who where ancients thought, what we do today is for the generations of tomorrow. But today it is too common for individuals and governments as well to borrow against tomorrow, to live well today. That is the wrong attitude. For you are all one. All is one—animals, plants, human beings, earth, stones—all is one. Past present, and future—all is one!

Right at the moment you are the summation of your past. You are creating your future. You are creating your children's future. You are creating generations upon generations of future by your actions today. So, as all that we have said to you about different things may seem disconnected, all of them are connected, and you must realize such. As we have said, they seem unconnected, but they are connected. They are one.

Life is a unity. It is a flow of unity.

We have spoken to you in very practical terms about various things that you can do to not only halt, but even to reverse much of the damage that you have done.

Possibly, the one issue that we have not touched upon is predatory cycles, and how important it is for the pyramids of predation to exist. For, especially amongst the animal kingdom, predators are in a hierarchy. And the hierarchy maintains a balance, not only of the population of the animals, but of the way in which those animals interact with water supplies and plants. And when you disrupt the animals, you disrupt the forests and the savannas, and the deserts, because they are part of what keeps the status quo in place.

So, when you think of treating all as one, you must then think about maintaining the animals. For, if you say, "Oh, we shall preserve the rain forest," but you do not take the animals into consideration and you destroy apex predators, soon it will change the way that the animals interact. Soon, seeds will not be distributed in the same way. Soon, the various impregnation of plants will cease, and your rain forest will begin to change and ultimately be decimated.

Just as when wolves were eliminated from the Yellowstone National Park areas, it had an impact on the trees and the forest and the rivers. And as the re-establishment of them are having a positive impact, so it is with your apex predators throughout all of the earth and in the oceans. It is important. For you think that global warming and your coral wreaths are the only issue in your oceans, or perhaps you think a little plastic, or a lot of plastic, is the only issue facing your ocean. But the truth of the matter is, when you alter your apex predators through inappropriate hunting, through inappropriate use of sonar or other devices that kill these predators or disable them or impact their bioelectrical fields which they use for hunting, you are altering the plant life as well. And ultimately when you start altering the plant life, you start altering the lower forms of animal life. And when you start altering those, you start exacerbating the effects on predators. And, ultimately, in such, you start to create a barren, lifeless world, whether it be on land or in the water.

So, with that, we say to you, again, ALL IS ONE.

We close out this series, reminding you that in everything that we have told you, there is room for you to apply such to your lives individually and collectively. But only when they are applied collectively and recognized in importance individually, will they have their full impact. But if you do these things, you will not just preserve your Earth, your world, you will actually begin to restore it. And your world, your living, breathing, alive Earth, is much like the human body. It is very forgiving. You may mistreat your body and have bad habits for a prolonged period of time, but if you do not pass a certain threshold of harm, your body can recuperate and regenerate very quickly. People who have had bad habits for years, even decades, can in a matter of a few months, reap true benefits from changing their habits, and in a matter of a few years often reverse almost all of the damage, even if they are willing to take up good habits, not simply reverse the damage, but be in better health than they were before they began the habits. So it is with your earth!

At this time, you still have not quite crossed that threshold. So if you apply these things in the here and the now and continue to apply them, you cannot just stop the damage, you can reverse the damage and begin to rebuild your world... begin to rebuild the very essence of the Earth upon which you live. And with scientific knowledge and proper desire, once you have brought the Earth back to the balance that you desire, you can maintain that balance.

It is the dream of generations, the dream of centuries, the dream of eons, the New Jerusalem, the heaven on Earth, the thousand years of peace, the Garden of Eden restored. It has many names. It has great possibility and potentiality. But it requires you to act.

We leave you with blessings and with peace. Peace be with each of you.
Go forth! Save your world!
